The type specimen of Daspletosaurus torosus (CMN 8506) is a partial skeleton including the skull, the shoulder, a forelimb, the pelvis, a femur and all of the vertebrae from the neck, torso and hip, as well as the first eleven tail vertebrae. It was discovered in 1921 near Steepleville, Alberta, by Charles Mortram Sternberg, who thought it was a new species of Gorgosaurus.

Mantle length (ML) is the standard size measure for coleoid cephalopods (shell diameter being more common for nautilus) and is almost universally reported in the scientific literature. The mantle is the cephalopod's "body", lying posterior to the head and enclosing the visceral mass and mantle cavity, the latter being used for locomotion by jet propulsion.

One of my projects here at The Ideophone has been to track down early sources on ideophonic phenomena. For example, I have suggested that we may call the 1850s the decade of the discovery of ideophones in African linguistics. But we can push back the linguistic discovery of ideophones a little further by looking to other traditions.

Paul propose 45 ou moins [10].Les vertèbres contenaient des cavités au niveau du cou et des premières dorsales [3].
